"HANDSOME HARRY" HUNG. He was a Criminal All His Life and Met Death Coolly.

New York, Dec. 5 .- Henry Carlton alias

'Handsome Harry" was hanged in the tombs court yard for the murder of Officer Brennan at 7:29 this morning. He met his fate unhe was pronounced dead. His neck was broken and his struggles were slight. At 4 o'clock Under Sheriff Sexton arrived at the tombs. He went at once to the murderer's cage to awaken Carlton, but found the doomed man sleeping been sleeping since 11:30. He sprang out of bed and with a smile upon his tace bade the deputies good morning. He dressed himself carefully and spent much time in arranging his necktie and hair. He attired himself in a suit of black cloth sent him by Sheriff Flack. He leisurely blacked his shoes and, walking past the men who composed his death watch, asked them how he looked. After chatting pleasently with the deputies and keepers he asked what time his breakfast would be ready, ordering coffee, boiled eggs, hot rolls and toast. He then started for the chapel. On either side of him were deputies, while Father Gelinus took up a position in front. Carlton walked with a firm step and head erect. Father Gelinus administered the sacrament and said mass. During the observance of this religious ceremony Carlton prayed fervently and seemed to be deeply affected. Over a half hour was spent in prayer, and it was nearly 6 o'clock before the condemned man left the chapel. At 6:25 his breakiast was served and he ate heartily and with apparent relish. After finishing his meal he prayed with his spiritual adviser, asking God father and mother.

THE MARCH TO THE GALLOWS. At 7:20 Under Sheriff Sexton and his posse arrived and the death warrant was read. At the conclusion of the reading hangman Atkinson adjusted the knot about Carlton's neck, His sions, but not a dollar more; second, for the arms were then pinioned and the procession to drawn and a second after Carlton was launched his legs were drawn up a few times, but those were all the struggles apparent. It was exactly 7:29 when the drop fell and life was extinct at 7:34. Shortly after the body was lowered into nues of the government, having in view, at all times and under all circumstances, a liberal tery. While Carlton was eating his breakfast a very sad scene occurred at the door of the prison. Carlton's old, gray-headed father came into the office and piteously begged the warden to allow him to see his son. The warden, fearing that if Carlton saw his father he would break down, refused. The father, finding that his appeals were in vain, sank upon a chair and sobbed as though his heart would break, exclaiming "My boy, my boy, they won't hang him; they can't hang him." Two deputies finally led him from the prison and he went away. HIS CRIME.

Carlton's crime was the killing on October 28, 1888, of Policeman James Brennan. Carlton, with two companions named Eddie O'Hearn and Yule Burke, forced a quarrel on Julius Roesler, a waiter whom they met between 4 and 5 a.m. on the date above mentioned in Tucker's saloon at 33d street and 3d for a list of the rear admirals and commodores avenue. The quarrel was subsequently renow on the active list, with a statement as to newed on the sidewalk and Policeman Brennan, coming up, was shot by Carlton at short range, two bullets taking effect in his face. Carlton was brought to trial December 10, 1888, when he admitted that he shot the policeman, but his defense was that Brennan hit him with his club, and, believing himself to much of the third section of the act of 1875 as be in great bodily harm, he used his revolver to protect his life. The jury agreed upon its verdict of murder in the first degree in less than an hour. The court of appeals affirmed the conviction and the governor refused to commute the sentence of death. Carlton, who was twenty-eight years of age, had been a criminal practically all his life.

PLAN OF IRRIGATION.

Special Dispatch to THE EVENING STAR. NEW YORK, Dec. 5.- This afternoon the chamber of commerce of this city convened to listen to the address of Major J. W. Powell of the United States geological survey on "Problems of irrigation." He said it would cost one thousand million dollars to redeem by irrigation one hundred million acres of arid land, and that this land, when reclaimed, would be worth five to ten thousand million of dollars, He outlined a policy as to how to get this vast sum and apply it; how to modify the land laws so as to keep the lands in the hands of the people; how to divide the water among the several states and territories for their settiers; how to enable the people to pay for the irrigating, and how to protect their forests, their pastures, their minerals and their water powers. He held that all the arid lands must be divided into irrigation districts having municipal powers; that the money for irrigation could be raised by bonding the lands, titles not to be complete till paid; and that all the benefits obtainable could be got by the settlers themselves without the mediation of great corporations.

The plan divides responsibility between Congress, the state legislatures and the irrigation district assemblies, and allows the farmers to regulate their own affairs in their own way; to borrow money, levy taxes, issue bonds as they themselves shall determine; to exastruct reservoirs and dig canals where and how they please; to make their own laws and choose their own Handsome Harry Carlton Pays the officers; to protect their own forests, utilize their own pasturage and do as they please with their own water powers. It is understood here that this policy of irrigation is to be presented to Congress at an early day.

IT IS PITTSBURG'S TURN. Big Fire There Today in the Monongahela House.

The firemen succeeded in getting to the roof from the rear and at-tached a rope from a chimney to the street. As soon as the rope touched the ground an unknown man climbed the rope and entered a window on the fourth floor. It is supposed he so soundly that he decided to let him rest until 5 is trying to rescue some one. A number of o'clock, at which hour he was called. He had ladies were carried from the building. So far no fatalities have been reported. The building is five stories high, and the two upper floors and attic are in flames. The firemen say the entire building is doomed. The fire started at 10:40 o'clock this morning and was discovered by Thos. O'Brien, the head porter. It started at the foot of the freight elevator, and the shaft acting as a flue the flames quickly shot up to the upper stories, giving the guests but a very few moments to get out. In ten minutes the three upper stories of the main building were on fire, the flames bursting from the windows on the sides of three streets. The fire is now extending to the annex, used as servants' quarters, in the rear, and it looks as if nothing could save the block. The building was erected after the great fire of 1845 and was one of the largest and most imposing blocks in the city. The hotel was known by all travelers and was mentioned by Dickens in his "American Notes" as the model hotel of the west. There were two hundred guests in the hotel and all got out in safety. No estimate of the losses can be given at this time. The entire fire department has been called out and
